Layaway plans make a comeback for holidays

If you thought layaway plans had gone the way of eight-track players and floppy disks, think again. The deferred payment or installment plan is making a big comeback.

For people who are unfamiliar with the concept or were born after the 1980s (when installment plans gave way to credit card purchases and other types of financing), layaway is a simple way to purchase merchandise — interest-free — over time. Consumers select the items they want to buy from a retailer offering the plan, make a deposit, which often includes a modest service charge, and pay for the merchandise over a specified period. Once the item has been paid in full, the retailer releases the goods to the consumer.

The only potential glitch is if the consumer fails to make payments in full or on time. In that event, the retailer has the option of returning the customer’s payments (less service charges) and reselling the items.

While there’s no doubt that today’s shaky economy has contributed to the revival of layaway plans, economists and representatives of several of the nation’s leading retailers and layaway providers — Sears, K-Mart, Burlington Coat Factory, Marshall’s, TJ Maxx, Toys R’ Us, and Hallmark — insist that the recession is only part of the story. For retailers, layaway plans open the doors to millions of new customers who would not be able to make purchases without them.

Overall, layaway plans are heavy on benefits, including:

■ No fine print: For the most part, retailers’ layaway plans are straightforward and easy to understand.
■ No credit checks: Credit checks are not required to enter into a layaway contract, making it a great option for people who are trying to rebuild their credit.
■ No need to leave home: Some retailers have launched e-layaway programs, making it possible for consumers to purchase online over time.

There are only a few drawbacks to layaway plans, but they are worth noting:

■ Missed payments: Making payments — and making them on time — is the key to a successful layaway purchase. The penalty for missing payments is the cancellation of the layaway contract. However, most plans offer a seven-day grace period for missed payments. It is important to know the details of each retailer’s plan before signing a contract.
■ Missed sale prices: For shoppers who count on cashing in on Black Friday sales, layaway might not be an option. Some retailers don’t offer Black Friday prices to layaway customers, so it pays to check with the stores you plan to patronize before the holiday shopping season begins.

Green alternatives for gift wrapping

If your holiday halls are decked with stacks of paper bags, mounds of crumpled wrapping paper, an array of random ribbons, and a gaggle of gift tags that are destined for the local landfill, it’s time to add a little “green” to your gift-wrapping regimen.

Here are some ways to go green and save green on gift packaging this year:

- Recycle: Conventional wrapping paper typically cannot be recycled since it is often coated in metal foil or is plastic laminated. But if the paper rips and doesn’t glitter or shine, it can — and should — be placed in the recycle bin along with other paper products. Check with your local recycling provider to find out which types of wrapping paper they accept. The good news is that recyclable wrapping paper is increasingly available from both online and brick-and-mortar retailers.

- Reuse: Before the opening of the gifts begins, set aside a box for collecting reusable boxes, wrapping paper, gift bags, bows, ribbons, and other decorative items. Even if wrapping paper is torn, it can be used for craft projects, packaging filler or to enclose smaller gifts the following year. Gift bags are also great candidates for reuse. If the surface of the bag is marred from removing ribbon or a bow, the spot can be covered with other decorative items or scraps of used wrapping paper.

- Reduce: Recycling and reusing boxes, wrapping paper, ribbon and gift bags is a big step in the right direction. But the best way to avoid waste is to reduce the use of these items in the first place. Rather than wrapping gifts in paper, consider using scarves, old tea towels, cloth napkins, or leftover fabric. If you’re crafty, consider creating your own simple fabric sacks that can be easily sewn by hand or machine. If you’re not, try painting an old pillowcase and tying it up with fabric ribbon, string or even shoelaces. And don’t forget newspaper! The comics make colorful giftwrap any time of year, particularly for kids.

Paducah Holiday Guide 2011

paducahsun.com
Deciding on and paying for holiday gifts can be a challenge under the best circumstances. But then there are the inevitable “sticky situations” that can leave even the most experienced gift-givers scratching their heads.

In the hopes of dodging major gift gaffes this holiday season, here are eight tips for gracious giving and receiving.

■ Review your gift list each year to determine if any relationships have changed and require a shift in your gift-giving plan.

■ Don’t ask non-family members on your gift list what they would like. This not only spoils the surprise, but puts pressure on recipients to gauge how much you want to spend and requires them to get you something in return.

■ Don’t feel obligated to match what others spend. Buying gifts based on what others spend is both unnecessary and can lead to excessive expenditures.

■ For workplace gifts, adhere to the company’s policies and make sure that gifts are given out of appreciation, not expectation.

■ Including a gift receipt is a good idea and avoids potentially awkward situations when an item doesn’t fit or doesn’t work.

■ Give holiday tips to those individuals whose service you count on throughout the year, such as hairstylists, babysitters, dog walkers, etc. An easy rule of thumb for holiday season tips is to double the usual tip. For household employees, give one week’s pay.

■ If someone surprises you with a gift, the best bet is to respond honestly. Let the giver know that you are surprised, touched and appreciative as well as a bit embarrassed that you don’t have a gift in return. Then let it go and add his/her name to your gift list for the following year.

■ Don’t arrive at holiday gatherings empty-handed. A small gift, bottle of wine or contribution to the evening’s edibles is the right way to thank your hosts for their invitation.

■ Acknowledging gift givers is a must, but formal, written thank you cards are optional. While handwritten notes are always preferable and greatly appreciated, e-mails are increasingly acceptable — especially for young people.

■ Regifting is now considered a (mostly) acceptable practice, as long as it’s done thoughtfully, tastefully and within the following guidelines:

■ The regifted item should not be homemade or made especially for you.

■ The item should be new, unused and in its original packaging, along with instructions.

■ Be sure to remove all previous wrapping and gift tags.

■ Don’t regift to friends or family members who have a reputation for returning things they don’t like. You don’t want to be asked for a gift receipt.

■ Make certain that the original giver and the new recipient will never cross paths.
Consider more than timing when shipping gifts

When shipping holiday gifts, much of the focus is on getting those gifts in the mail on time. While it’s important to avoid procrastinating when shipping holiday gifts, there’s more to shipping gifts than just getting them sent out promptly. When shipping holiday gifts this season, consider the following tips.

■ Ship through an online retailer. Billing address and the shipping address are two different categories when buying from an online retailer, and holiday shoppers should take advantage of a retailer’s willingness to package and ship gifts for you. Many online retailers will even gift-wrap items for you and include a personal note as well.

■ Protect the gift. For those who won’t be using an online retailer, be sure to protect the gift, especially if it’s fragile. Use bubble cushioning and packing peanuts when sending fragile items through the mail. If sending multiple items, wrap each item tightly in bubble cushioning but leave some space between the items for peanuts.

■ Carefully pack perishables. When sending perishable items, always send them via next-day delivery and never ship them near the end of the week, such as a Friday or Saturday. Items shipped on Friday and Saturday should be able to withstand a few days of being in transit. But when sending cheeses, fruits or any other perishable items, it’s best to do so early in the week and choose next-day delivery.

■ Insure more expensive gifts. Don’t skimp on insurance when sending expensive gifts such as jewelry through the mail. Shipping companies typically only insure items up to a certain amount, so insure more expensive items through your own insurance company so their full value is covered.

■ Comparison shop when shipping. Comparison shopping not only applies to holiday gifts, but shipping as well. Shipping companies, including the post office, compete for business come the holidays, and you can likely find a good deal to reduce the cost of shipping holiday gifts, costs that can add up if shipping several gifts.

Top Quality Consignment opened their first consignment shop over 15 years ago. With the overwhelming response from the Paducah and surrounding areas, TQ decided to branch out into the City of Murray back in August of 2008 with a smaller store. With the success of both locations running, TQ outgrew their old store next to Ingram Barge Co. and relocated at their present building at 3333 Irvin Cobb Dr., Unit 105, in the Farmer’s Market Plaza next to Holman House. With this achievement in their new 14,000 square foot building, Paducah came thru once again. Management was thrilled with the overwhelming consignors who had their trust and confidence in us. TQ wanted to give back to the community. This season is a time of giving. TQ gives back with the opening of the TQ Thrift Store located next to Top Quality. Every item is marked just $1, with a percentage of the proceeds to go toward a different non-profit organization each month. TQ feels blessed to have customers and consignors who support us. Without you, the customer, we would be nothing. We ask that you join us for our Christmas Open House to show our appreciation. Remember, tis the season for the joy of giving. Let’s us give back to you, Paducah. Below is a coupon for Holman House, our neighbor, who would like to join us in our Open House. Come celebrate with us!
